Online National Conference on Changing Practices and Emerging Paradigms in Field Education of Undergraduate Social Work Programmes

June 4 - 5, 2021 (2-5 PM)

About the Conference

Social work education is undergoing tremendous changes today as uncertainty and volatility are increasingly becoming the characteristic features of modern times. Field education, an integral part of social work education, encounters the most challenging times since face to face contact itself is at stake, even for helping professionals. Disasters and pandemics affecting massive populations have become frequent and repetitive at every part of the globe. This calls for changes in social work education especially the field education and training to meet the emerging needs. Several social work schools and agencies have experimented with education, training and field intervention models and extensive use of online platforms for reaching out to people and in ensuring sustainability in practices. As ensuring quality of learning and supervision demands for effective and evidence-based practices, this conference aims at bringing together the social work students, educators and field practitioners at the undergraduate level together to share their experiences, models of intervention and emerging practices in order to strengthen the field education practice amidst challenging situations.

Objectives of the Conference

1. To discuss the emerging opportunities and challenges in the field education scenario.
2. To bring together the model/emerging interventions/practices in field education.
3. To voice the student experiences and learning in field education amidst challenges.
